Capital Village Schools seek to engage students daily using blended learning and community partnerships that capitalize on local resources. Using a micro-school model, Capital Village will deliver instruction through small, flexible groups and online curriculum to help students meet their learning objectives quickly, with the goal of earning college credits in high school. Capital Village asks students to demonstrate learning through debates or by using D.C.'s unique local resources—such as museums, social service groups, and government agencies—as classrooms. With its whole-child focus, Capital Village will empower students to use their own agency to drive their learning goals to completion.

TEAM LEADER: MONICA GREEN

Monica Green has been an educator in DC, MD, and VA for 14 years teaching English and theater, in addition to serving for four years as a coordinator for the AVID program, a college-preparatory program aimed at making college accessible to all students. As an entrepreneur, Monica has partnered with schools and educational organizations to provide curriculum writing and professional development consulting services. She is also a student in the dissertation-writing phase of a Ph.D in Educational Leadership. Monica enjoys camping, hiking and traveling with her husband, Roy, and 12-year-old son, Sean. As the founder of Capital Village Schools, she is relentlessly committed to redesigning the school experience by combining personalized learning, real world learning adventures, partnerships that capitalize on community resources, and an intentionally small village that is focused on the whole child.
